

Atul Bhargava
Managing Director
Intel Malaysia

Juru, the 'Intel and Friends Recycling' campaign, the 'Intel Go Green Batu Feringghi' beach cleanup, and the 'Walk with Me' walkathon, held in conjunction with World AIDS Day. This is in addition to the many other weekly activities that Intel Malaysia employees had conducted with more than 90 schools and NGOs under the IIMGP.

The significance of the volunteer hours and host of activities point to one thing: that corporate responsibility remains an essential ingredient in how we at Intel do business. We believe in doing well by doing good, and that whatever actions we take must always have a positive impact on our business and the community in which we live and operate in.

As we progress in 2009, I am confident that we will continue to contribute positively towards the welfare of both Intel employees and the communities around us. More importantly, I believe it is incumbent upon us as a corporate citizen to focus on activities that contribute towards nation building. At Intel, such activities would include promoting education in science and technology, creating a sustainable environment and advocating good business practices.

I hope all of you will join us to achieve our objectives for 2009. Together, I am certain that we can.

Intel and the Environment

Intel Mangrove Planting

Big smile from one of the Intel volunteers

A pair of hands that made a difference to the environment

Intel volunteer always ready to get down and dirty for a good cause

Mangrove trees act as natural barriers to erosions and large tidal waves including tsunamis

Intel employees determined to clock in to the 1 million hours of volunteer service

An advocator of better health and cleaner environment, Intel spearheaded its fourth mangrove tree planting activity at Kampung Sungai Sembilang, Juru. The project brought together the support of various sections of the community to increase awareness, responsibility and action towards maintaining a healthy and sustainable coastal environment. The project garnered the support of over 400 volunteers and planted a total of 4,000 mangrove saplings.

system is enhanced and updated to embrace technology-integrated teaching and learning skills," Ryaz Patel, Intel Malaysia country manager, sales and marketing.

A walk down memory lane

2008 had been a meaningful year at Intel as we celebrated our 40th Anniversary by donating over 1 million hours of community service worldwide. In Malaysia, Intel employees contributed approximately 150,000 volunteer hours. Here are some highlights of the community initiatives that were carried out in 2008.

Getting down and dirty for the environment

Saving the turtles

Volunteer hours equal funds for IIMGP schools

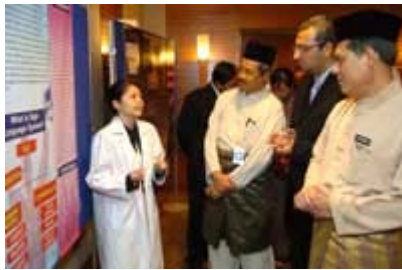

Expanding Intel-Academia collaboration

A Classmate PC for every child

Moulding future scientists and inventors of Malaysia

A well-deserved accolade

Intel Involved volunteers touching lives

